

Time for the long haul...

Posted by pure dove - 03 Aug 2011 17:39

---

I have been clean for fourteen days. I got back into learning, started davening with kavana, and feel amazing. Unfortunately, I had to leave Yeshiva today and am not going to be heading back for at least another three and a half weeks. I am currently writing this on a computer with no filter (it is my roommates and he has yet to change the password. working on it though!). The first thing I did when I got back to my place was open up g-mail and read some chizuk emails that I saved in preparation. I am going to get off the internet the second I finish writing this until my roommate gets back. I don't feel such a tayva right now, but I know that it is going to come. I feel strong about my 90 day quest, I feel a connection to forum and its "social" and inner pressures that is helping me refrain. But I still know that there is danger lurking everywhere. So I guess it is time for the long haul. Let's see how my big rig can handle the road trip.

(BTW, any suggestions would be helpful!!!!)

=====

=====

Re: Time for the long haul...

Posted by bardichev - 03 Aug 2011 19:14

---

keep on trucking!!!!

=====

=====

Re: Time for the long haul...

Posted by Gevura Shebyesod - 03 Aug 2011 19:38

---

"Keep your eyes on the road and your hands upon the wheel....."

=====

=====