Oh my heavens, your back.

At least you have the guts to come back using the same username.

I was thinking about you the other day, it went something like this, "wow, GYE is really not a place to make loyal friends..."

It ain't just you but I think you are going to have to supply us with an email or something so that we can get hold of you on your next escapade to the north pole.

How are things?

How is it going at home?

Praying for you.

day 1

The phrases "Hayom al l'vovecha" and "asher Anochi metzaveh es'chem Hayom" in kriyas sh'ma are both explained by chazal to mean that His proclamation here is new - today is the first day.

This is precisely living one day at a time. It is an approach to life in kriyas sh'ma itself. It reminds us each time we say it that Hashem is concerned with how we do today. Not yesterday, nor tomorrow. Teshuva is only relevant inasmuch as it affects today's avodah. Hashem only asks for one day at a time!

thank you guys for the welcome back.. it is shameful that i was seriously thinking i should come back anonymously... all here is still the same, old dog, old tricks, old nonsense, the same old addiction, family/wife all suffering because of me as usual

And yes. Despite all of that today IS the day - the FIRST Day!

l'chaim, gents.

Welcome back! We launched a new exercise today called W.I.T.Y which might be helpful at keeping clean now for the long term.

Check it out: guardyoureyes.com/wity

Aaaaaaaaaand.....Yay! He's back!

Welcome!

(If you run away again, we will hunt you down...)

This time, may I suggest you try something different?

Trying the same thing and expecting different results? Not likely.

"Nothing changes as long as everything stays the same" ~ Dov

"Insanity is when you do the same thing and expect different results" ~unclear

You can reply if you are interested in my opinion, or you can just ignore me.

Wishing you well.
