

Sporadic Failures revisited

Posted by Lev tahor - 01 Apr 2009 23:23

---

I posted about 5 months ago regarding my all-too-long experience with this problem. I mentioned how it usually rears its ugly head during Bein haZmanim, which has now arrived. Unfortunately the Zman itself has been far from perfect in this regard (a problem I hadn't had before), but there's still lots of 'potential' for Bein haZmanim to be worse. There are *so* many logical reasons why it's so terrible for me (apart from the obvious ones), and yet - I feel helpless to resist. (As I type, I've been procrastinating posting because I've been busy failing to fight the Yetzer...) I had to access K9 for a certain reason (they've just upgraded, put in some useful new features), and I wasn't able to convince myself to put in a password that I wouldn't know. Hopefully by the end of this evening I will have gotten over that hurdle, but only because I've allowed myself to sink again! I've had various moments of inspiration over the past few weeks, but not enough to last when it counts! Any tips? (I know, there are a lot of pointers on the rest of the site, some of which I know thoroughly, others that I should review...) I'm glad I managed to actually type up a post, and make some half-hearted attempt at normalcy, but I'm not currently strong enough to do anything much more concrete. (I wonder if I'll even be able to be serious enough to read any responses properly - as is I'm just very vaguely skimming the Chizuk emails )

=====

=====

Re: Sporadic Failures revisited

Posted by Eye.nonymous - 26 Apr 2011 07:47

---

Lev Tahor wrote on 24 Apr 2011 02:39:

Good to see you back, Lev Tahor. It took a lot of courage to do that after not being here for so long.

Stick around. Post post post.

--Eye.

=====
=====