

IS THE FORUM DYING? / ARE WE AWAKE?

Posted by Holy Yid - 21 Oct 2010 19:41

It seems that in general people are posting much less then they used to.

Do you think this is true?

If yes is it a good thing or bad thing?

For those who can benefit from a more active forum how can we change that?

Dov,

You are right. However, it is possible that some of us are not making an effort to be as aware as we should. Some might have grown bored with this thing. Some may not care about themselves or others as much.

So maybe if I dare say that we should explore our intentions as to why we are not so involved.

In light of Dov's comments I change the name of the thread.

How about: Does this forum need a kick in the &%@?

...just kidding. Thanks for the consideration, though....

I am afraid someone would report it to the moderator

I've put the question to DEEP THOUGHT, and he has finally spit back the answer:

competition from the 12 step phone groups!

It seems that too many of our best and finest are finding that they have brought the camaraderie of GYE to the next level, and are joining together for a full hour a day in the telephone conference rooms.

Is that a good thing, or bad thing, or... Dov, is that question a moot point altogether?

Nu rabosai what's the maskana?

Is it the phone groups??

Anything else??

Whats the raid??

Maybe our best and finest are leaving into phone groups and recovery meetings...we need to go out and break some legs...or maybe other parts....I shouldn't have said that...
