we all speak so much about the importance of getting right back up as quickly as possible why? what is so important about picking oneself up (other than stopping to act out which one can do with out getting back up)?

i heard a beautiful explanation

Bnei Yisrael are called Hashems children many times in psukim, midrashim etc what is so special about a childs relationship with his parents that exists in no other relationship? the fact that both sides know no matter what they do they cant sever the relationship entirely they can weaken it but it is unbreakable no matter how fragile it is therefore when we get up right after we fall and decide to change we are acknowledging that our relationship with hashem is special and that it cant be broken and that whatever we do hashem still wants us because we are his children
