

A Sefard in an Ashkenaz Land

Posted by helplessjewboy - 20 May 2011 13:20

I am a struggling teenager trying to find balance in this tough and rough world. I don't know where to turn to. I am sefardic and there is no guardyoureyes.com for sefards. I am only minutely acquainted with the Ashkenaz world, but I don't know where else to turn to for help.

Can anybody recommend anything to help?

Helplessjewboy

=====

=====

Re: A Sefard in an Ashkenaz Land

Posted by TheJester - 20 May 2011 13:58

helplessjewboy wrote on 20 May 2011 13:20:

I am sefardic and there is no guardyoureyes.com for sefards. I am only minutely acquainted with the Ashkenaz world, but I don't know where else to turn to for help.

Can anybody recommend anything to help?

Huh? You're Jewish, aren't you?

Sephardim have a different Torah? Brains? Urges? Please help me to understand the issue here... This community will reach out and help you regardless of whether you're Sephardi, Ashkenazi or one of the Lost Tribes...

Welcome, ~~friend~~ brother.

=====

Re: A Sefard in an Ashkenaz Land
Posted by Kedusha - 20 May 2011 14:26

There are plenty of Sefardim on GYE.

Welcome home!

=====

Re: A Sefard in an Ashkenaz Land
Posted by ZemirosShabbos - 20 May 2011 14:40

hi and welcome!

there are no pedigree prerequisites here, all you need a is a desire to help - yourself and others.

pour a cup of arak and make yourself at home.

wishing you much hatzlacha

ZS

=====

Re: A Sefard in an Ashkenaz Land
Posted by ur-a-jew - 20 May 2011 15:29

Me3 I agree, ZS's post was a little over the top. Arak, sefard or ashkenaz, I never understood how someone could drink that stuff.

=====

=====

Re: A Sefard in an Ashkenaz Land
Posted by Me3 - 20 May 2011 15:33

Very funny, offending poster has already removed his post I would delete mine, but kedusha has deleted so many of mine recently I need to get my post count up. happen to agree with you about that Arak stuff, though.

To the original poster, as others have mentioned we welcome all types here, we even tolerate Kedusha!

=====

=====

Re: A Sefard in an Ashkenaz Land
Posted by silentbattle - 20 May 2011 15:53

Welcome aboard, friend.

=====

=====

Re: A Sefard in an Ashkenaz Land
Posted by ur-a-jew - 20 May 2011 16:11

JewBoy, welcome. No one is helpless and if you stick around here for long enough you will see.

=====

=====

Re: A Sefard in an Ashkenaz Land
Posted by Kedusha - 20 May 2011 17:12

Me3 wrote on 20 May 2011 15:33:

We welcome all types here, we even tolerate Kedusha!

=====

Re: A Sefard in an Ashkenaz Land
Posted by laagvokeles - 21 May 2011 21:40

if we could erase whats been spoken as whats been written....

kedusha good job....
Better than tolerating Tumah!
(sorry 8))

=====

Re: A Sefard in an Ashkenaz Land
Posted by miracles - 22 May 2011 02:15

Im sephardic!!! give me a call. I'll message u my info. Relax man A JEW IS A JEW, we all have bris millahs and we all read the same torah and learn the same Gemara. And, we all have the same test with pornography and mast.

=====

Re: A Sefard in an Ashkenaz Land
Posted by helplessjewboy - 22 May 2011 02:53

Thank you very much for all your hospitality. I feel much more at home now.

I realize Chazal's sayings holds true.

"Acheinu Ha'ashkenazim."

Thank you very much.

I am just a bit happier and bit more motivated to go on and continue my sober streak, now two days so far. Nothing too crazy, but let's see if we can extend that.

Helpless yet hopeful Jew boy.

=====
=====

Re: A Sefard in an Ashkenaz Land

Posted by silentbattle - 22 May 2011 03:58

It feels hopeless at times, doesn't it? But I think that's usually because we think, "I want to be sober for the rest of my life? No way I can do that!"

And the good news is, we don't have to do that. All you have to do is be sober for...today. Every day. But every day, your focus is on staying sober that day. "One day at a time" has gotten me through many of the yetzer hora's attempts.

Two days is huge! That's 172,800 seconds of restraining yourself. And each of those seconds is a beautiful gem in Hashem's eyes, and each of those seconds has made you into a different person. Value every second of staying clean!

And now a question - even though it may only have been 2 days, does it feel good so far?

=====
=====

Re: A Sefard in an Ashkenaz Land

Posted by Reb Yid - 22 May 2011 04:33

Hey Sefardi!!!

Welcome aboard!!!

I never thought that it mattered to identify myself based on ethnicity. Not that I mind. I just didn't understand why it would make a difference. But if it does matter to you, I am also a Sefardi. SY in fact. Pm me if you'd like, and we can speak. But hang out here and learn from everyone. I have gained tremendously myself from all the guys here, and like I said, it never made a difference to me to even consider who is Sefardi or otherwise.

PS - I will agree readily that I can't understand how anybody drinks that Arak stuff. But I must say, I'd rather get wasted on that, then go near "Ptcha" or whatever it's called!!!! But I guess to

=====

Re: A Sefard in an Ashkenaz Land
Posted by Dov - 22 May 2011 05:50

Hey, fellow helplessjewboy!

Where I come from, the people I started getting better with were mostly goyim (and still are, actually). It seems to me that you need friends, first. Nothing abnormal about that!

each his own

And judging from the responses above, you've stumbled into quite a few real goldmines already!

L'chayim tovim!!

=====