

time for a debate

Posted by lavi - 17 Jun 2014 00:08

---

hi everyone out there, for those who don't know me my username is lavi and for those who know me by now - same thing-.i am going to introduce my self and at the same time bring up a topic(pidaini convinced me) which i feel is important. i have an addiction to surf the net and view inappropriate sites, even though. i don't go to porn, although i've been tempted. many veteran commentators on the site (they should be blessed) say for my own good i should be more specific. i don't think this is necessary. so far i'm doing ok. if anyone out there (or in here) would like to debate or convince or discuss this idea with me i will be eternally grateful. i can understand the approach to tell everything, i'm just not convinced that everyone has to go through this. your buddy

lavi

=====

=====

Re: time for a debate

Posted by Dr.Watson - 19 Jun 2014 22:07

---

May you be matzliach in all good things in ruchniyus and in gashmiyus. May Hashem shower you with brocho, hatzlocho, simcha, parnosos tovo, torah, yiras shomayim, arichus yomim veshonim in good health for you and your family and all good things.

=====

=====

Re: time for a debate

Posted by kilochalu - 20 Jun 2014 02:44

---

and for all of klal yisroel!

=====

=====

Re: time for a debate

Posted by melost - 22 Jun 2014 15:10

---

it helps to share( NOT IN A EXPLICIT WAY)what you are struggling with so others can relate and understand on the question you posed that you are not looking at porn for me it doesn't make a difference what kind of acting out it is there is two things DO I WANT TO STOP AND I CANT AND DOES IT MAKE MY LIFE UNMAGEABLE OR IS IT TAKING OTHER MY LIVES and here we get to another point that my problem isn't sex its lust so for one guy he gets his lust hit by that someone by something else but its all the same thing a lot of hatzlacho

avrom

=====

=====

Re: time for a debate

Posted by lavi - 22 Jun 2014 20:18

---

thank-you avrom-melost for your post. you have said a lot of things in a couple lines. what you wrote about DOES IT MAKE MY LIFE UNMAGEABLE OR IS IT TAKING OTHER MY LIVES, i think you'll agree that you don't have to wait for that point before taking action BUT a lot of times, it happens like you said.

your friend lavi.

=====

=====

Re: time for a debate

Posted by Pidaini - 23 Jun 2014 22:23

---

Hey lavi!

You know how we discussed our relationship earlier, I still haven't gotten to know you any better

It seems as though you want to help people, so let me give you a piece of experience.

The only way things work in this business is by sharing what helped for us, sharing our experience. When I see someone going through the same thing as me, yet acting differently, it sinks in. When someone just throws around advice....it's more of a nuisance than a help.

There are even many professionals out there, but only very specifically trained ones can help an addict find the way, and even then, many push their clients to go and listen to other recovering addicts.

What is your experience?

=====
=====

Re: time for a debate

Posted by unanumun - 24 Jun 2014 01:36

---

I think that Lavi is just suffering from new member syndrome in his own way.

I remember it took me some time to realize that what the oilam was saying was correct and all my chakiros and savoros won't get me anywhere.

It is a process and takes a bit of time to realize what we are really up against and sit back and take advice.

The fact that he finally posted today is proof that he is starting to change the way he thinks.

if you look through some of the long threads you can see extreme examples of how people changed the way they looked at things and even their tones and apparent aggression as well as their pride went through complete change as they started on the way to recovery.

Lavi, we are all rooting for you. I think that you may have to do some introspection to see if what you have been doing until now has really helped you discover change in the way you deal with your issues of lust and whatever it is that brought you here, or if it is just pushing off the issue until it explodes.

=====
=====