many different ways depends on the couple but for sure does mess things up to some level by every addict or not even an addict just someone acting out, if a guy isn't living real life how could he have a real marriage when the whole idea of marriage is living life together with someone else and sharing etc.

we don't always realize how this addiction is really killing us on so many different levels in life , but after being clean for some time we can start to look back and see how out of touch we are when we give in to our problem, kol tuv and KUTGW!!!

dd thank you for the insight an addict "isn't living a real life"

how true i didn't realize that. that is probably why my wife doesn't love me, i guess.

most people come to GYE thinking that they are two separate problems, then if they stick around they realize just how inextricably intertwined they are.

in my humble opinion,

it is a kind of stealing,

because the wife doesn't get the attention she needs,

kinda like "emotion adultery"

One does not focus on the wife.

Lust takes over one's life.

The kids are second or third fiddle.

The bedroom is an x-rated stage or screen.

the wife is an actress.

Intimacy is all about me/us.

If the addiction involves other women or multiple women, the wife places second or third...all the time.

Substitute in my post

street for screen or stage

the rest remains the same was it my imagination /thoughts, or was the street worse today than yesterday?

sheesh....

WELCOME! It definitely causes marriage problems. Read the shalom bayis thread (there's a link in my signature) for an extreme case, but the balabayis section is full of stories from people who's marriage dramatically improved when they stopped acting out.

Acting out is about lust. Lust is selfish. Selfishness destroys marriages.

Hang around. You'll learn a lot.

I know I did.

Yes now i see it more clearly , i definitely agree with that.

even if she doesnt exactly know my addictions , she has lost all respect for me i am in the greatest of pains and dont know what to do. she believes i used her all along its a very sad story.
