So I'm Tzoros and my yetzer hara is online chatrooms, invariably leading me up the wrong path. I've tried K9 filter but it doesn't work so well. This is my ultimate pitful.

Welcome,

Chat lines have been the pitfalls of many of us. I just saw a sign in our local anchorage shul that k9 is not the filter it once was. Personally, we like wolves here.

Regardless, welcome.

Most of us here don't bite.

Welcome!

Be careful - you gave away your age, someone may know who you are...

grow up

Thanks - you hit the nail on the head - please re-read my post

That was precisely my point -Many people (not all) come here to feel safe in their anonymous cloak and want to remain that way, so I was bringing out that point in in a nice way

The reason I emphasized that, is due to the fact that many people (not all) as you say need to "grow up", stop being anonymous, get on the phone with one of the successful truckers (see "Free Towing" below) and recovery will truly begin.

I wish you and Mr tzaros a pain free day ;-)

Instead of saying what doesn't work and what shouldn't be said, let's share what works for us.

I have posted in my story thread

imgonadoit if you'd like to share about your recovery moves to SA etc please do

Mr Tzaros please forgive my intrusion, and accept my warm welcome to the club where you can have more fun with the guys here than you find in those chatrooms 2663 clicked "thank you" on MarkZZZZ's posts, so they all disagree with you (and for good reason).

This is a public forum; there are many fellows and types here. That's what makes the world go round.

Addicts in general are manipulators (like myself). They (me) think they know the perfect road to recovery. Bottom line is that there is a forum here that discusses recovery - in all ways. Some of it might not be good for some people and that's fine. Choices are made all the time. When people walk the street, they need to decide where to look and where and when to close their eyes. When one is surfin' the net, he makes decisions every moment. When he/she are in the shower/bath, they have choices.

All on GYE have choices as well. You don't like someone's style; ignore it! Lower his karma. Click the "un-thank you" button. Disagree with him. But if anythin' effects your sobriety, it's on you man!
