

Yiddish/Hebrew speakers welcome!

Posted by Grant400 - 28 Oct 2020 14:16

It seems like there are many people who browse this forum and gain from the wonderful people and posts here, like we all do, and although understand English, don't feel comfortable writing their own point of view or expressing an opinion because English is not their first language.

I'd like to welcome them and ask them to PLEASE join us. Many of us understand Yiddish and/or Ivrit (although not as our first language) and would enjoy dialogue with you guys.

If we don't understand specific parts we can always ask for an explanation And those who don't understand at all can do the same. Those of us who understand can translate when necessary.

So please start your own thread in whatever language you feel comfortable and we will be glad to join.

(Just one request, please try not to write too flowery which would make it complicated to understand when not necessary)

Grant

Welcome all Yiddish & Heberw speaking chavirim.

Do you think that GYE didn't think of you guys?

There is a Hebrew site <https://gye.org.il/>

And a Yiddish Site <https://hitdanoigen.com/>

Hatzlucha Raba

If you should need any help you could reach out to me. I speak both Hebrew and Yiddish.

Yes, but there was a conversation here about how those sites don't compare to the English one. The writer professed that he hangs around here because there is so much more to gain, yet he wishes he can actively participate. Hence the invite.

The Yiddish site is dead according to this one + it's much easier to type in English.

I am on Hitdanoigen too and I am fluent in Yiddish and Hebrew. I think that it is precisely because of the English or American culture that people who are bilingual prefer GYE. Once people start writing in Yiddish or Hebrew the culture will change and it will defeat the purpose of GYE. In addition, this will create clicks which is a very bad idea for many reasons. I don't think that this thread is a good idea.
