Hey there helpneeded2022, welcome!

I'm also Chasidish, married, and have kids, but what really matters is that I'm in the process of getting out of a similar-sounding situation, and I'd love to try and help you.

It sounds like you're in a tough spot, but what's even worse than the situation is the confusion and lack of clarity I'm sensing (as you state, "don't know where to start"). Creating a new life is possible but needs to be clearly defined first.

I think you should set aside an hour (is that enough?) free from distractions, sit down and try to sort out your thoughts and emotions.

What exactly is bothering you?

Why does it bother you?

What would you like to change?

Once you have a clearer picture, we can try to figure out the proper steps.

Hatzlacha!

If I may add, browse the forums, there's a treasure trove of chizuk and advice all around. I didn't realize how wrong my perspective was on so many issues until I started browsing the forums.

One way to start sorting out your feelings is to make a list of the reasons you feel you NEED to stop. Getting everything down clearly on paper will allow you to understand what steps and Gedarim will work for you to begin to stop.

If you want to, please look at the post that I linked below in my signature. This will hopefully address points 3 and 4 of your struggle, if you haven't addressed them already.
