Hello chevrah! ah freilechin wonderful chanukah to all of us fighters!

I just docked in san francisco, it was a long rocky trip from shanghai, hope to find some steady grounding over here!

Bikitzur i am an old timer/new timer, decided to come back and say hello!!

My journey (which is far from over l'choirah) is unique (like everyones!), and if i find it beneficial i will be posting more!

sorry but i need some sleep it's been quite a journey!! hatzlocha to all!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!! looking forward to connecting and being honest and open with you all!!

{and yes for all of you that are way to nervous to call someone what if it's my brother? what if it's my neighbor?..... what if he screams at me? what if we really don't connect? i'm way to shy... i'm such a intervert that u don't even chop....., i just wanna say that these are all valid and sensible thoughts that i also had, and yes there were people that i spoke to in the past that i felt like what was the point? they didn't connect with me, they don't get it! but with all that being said bh eventually i found my person and it is truly life changing for me!

Same here, I still have a hard time talking to my newfound friends even though they know most of my life story. But the feeling of getting it out there and being open, vulnerable and safe is amazing.

Just curious how do you dabble in sa isn't it a massive that you go and are in it forever? Asking altz not sure if I need sa

Hi whether you need sa or not is beyond my pay grade, you gotta speak to the greats, and you should bec. it could be life changing....., but for me i never actually went to a meeting, but i did join some phone meetings here and there, and i do happen to know quite a few guys that are in sa so i had conversations with them, but i think it was all out of curiosity and maybe even a way to sickly lust, whatever, btw my impression is that you can always leave, noone forces anything, good luck, oh and did i forget to say? there aint no meetings out here in the mir!

Terrific!

Please make sure to go someplace now for a while where you are protected, and stay in touch with the Oilam...

Grabbing the moment of Gevura is best when a person uses it to be also Mikayeim ???? ????

KOMT!!!
