

The Pomodoro Technique - conquer laziness

This thread is dedicated to discussion of the Pomodoro Technique.

You can google it for some info.

This technique helps you go from super lazy to super productive.

Since laziness causes underachievement and overwhelm, both major RID sources, overcoming laziness is a big part of the recovery program for someone who is lazy. Like me.

How the Pomodoro Technique works: (Part 1)

Set a timer for 25 minutes.

Do your most important tasks for 25 minutes.

Congratulations! You've completed a Pomodoro.

Take a five minute break.

Repeat the process.

After every fourth completed Pomodoro, take a 30 minute break.

I know what you mean.

Unless you're joking of course.

But several days of loathsome unproductiveness, worthlessness, wastingtimeness, etc can give you a push to do what you gotta do to crawl out of the laziness den.

Anyhoo, just putting this out there.

I hope others will find it useful.

not sure.

I did a forum search on pomodoro before starting a new thread.

I came across that username, but don't know if he's related.

ikr

pretty simple

but it works wonders

you get the relaxation / recess / renewal / etc that you feel you need...

you don't let it take over your whole day...

you accomplish a ton...

I don't believe pordomoro would work for me as time management is a major Asperger issue as depicted in my thread here and I hope to elaborate more next week
