I think it meant so much to all of us to really get to talk to and hear from those who guide us here on GYE daily.

AMEN!! Reb Guard's and 7Up's calls were the highlight of the evening for me too. A close second was being bear-hugged by Uri as soon as I walked through the door. :D

The highlight of the night for me was when Imtrying picked up the phone and said "who?? Guard??" "no way!" ... "Hey everyone, Guard called in!" and Uri starts playing his guitar with triple the gusto and singing "Guard is the man, Guard is the man!"...

I always knew I was a man, but this time it really hit home!! Thank you Uri!! ;D ;D

And of-course, a big thanks to Imtrying for having the GUTS to do this (and for emptying his pockets)... Anyone who wants to donate to Imtrying for the kumzitz, or for future kumzitzim, should send the money to GYE and specify that it's for him. When I spend it, I will have him in mind.

Just kidding, I'll try and find a way to get it to him.

Seriously.

Guys, I saw the invitation when I got into work on Sunday, which was slightly too late. I appreciate being told about it, and I am happy that it was so successful.

I think that I would have no problem meeting all of you face to face and I am sure that it would be a pleasure. I am B'H a very proud member of my special family and I have come to love and respect every one tremendously.

However, I have one consideration. One of the things that the forum and everything else at GYE has given me because of the anonymity is the opportunity to really discuss my feelings without any inhibitions whatsoever. This is great for getting to understand myself, and to a large extent in being able to communicating with everyone honestly.

I think that if I was to get to know everyone personally I would lose this benefit. I am sure that at least subconsciously I would begin to watch what I say.

Please let me know whether I am correct. Thank you.

Maybe its a personal thing, but I've been very honest and open when posting, and I don't feel any differently after meeting some of the guys.

In fact, it's been easier to post to the guys since I've met them. It's more personal now, and I feel closer to them.

Ditto. Ditto.

We have to understand that were all in this boat together. We sare lust addicts. And getting to see real people and realizing that there are others out there just like you can definitely be a chizuk. We are all trying to help eachohter while were trying to get past this.

Also getting to know people actually allows you to speak to them in person or on the phone which is a huge help, if you ask me. I can understand someone being nervous, but he has to realize the tremendous gain there is to have. It feels so good to let yourself out to REAL PEOPLE who understand your feelings.

I am not sure. I think like this. B"h I am still clean since I started the 90 days three weeks ago. I dread the day that I might fall, but if I do c"v then I will be able to speak about it with everyone.

Now if I know everyone personally, I am sure that it is going to be much harder to be open about it. Maybe the first time c"v I will still be ok with it, but if c"v it happens again I am sure that at some point I will begin to be embarrassed, and then.....

I think that everyone needs to know themselves...but there's a feeling of freedom when you can finally open up and tell people - and with the people here, as IT25 said, you know we'll understand, and not judge you - and support you, and appreciate all your effort.

ADARABA. I feel more connected now that I've met some people here for real. I feel even more of a responsibility to be involved, and to be honest with them.
