

Shaar Bitachon

Posted by OTR - 19 Feb 2019 15:44

I was never big into the mussar approach. Yiras ha'onesh never talked to em, and still doesn't. I know there is a hell and I don't care enough to not act out because of it.

However, I want to share what has made a profound impact on my life. It doesn't help me stay clean when I have unrestricted internet access.. that environment is not one I want to be in and not one I think I will ever be able to be in at this time. But learning Shaar bitachon is Chovos halevavos every day (or at least regularly) has made a huge difference in how I see the world. I started with one or two minutes a few times a week, just to 'tune in'. Eventually I wanted to do a little more and got into doing it daily for a few minutes. The sefer does not tell you you have to have bitachon. But basically (as I read it) outlines what the relationship of bitachon looks like- whether that is bitachon in a friend, in god (which is his angle). The point is there are definitions for a trusting relationship. This was really powerful for me. Combined with an external environment that does not incite me, I feel very happy and normal.

When you learn it, do you see it as only referring to God? I see it entirely as a blueprint for trust in relationships. Of course his objective is to teach us bitachon in Hashem. But I think it was written in a way that we can derive and apply to all. What say you mr trouble?

No, I don't/didn't see it that way, but that's fine.
