Got a PM empathizing for the backlash

I'm just sitting here laughing out loud!

I find this discussion hilarions.

If the OP would have written 'Although there seems to be a mokor to be stringent, one should be aware that it's only a minhag/inyan/drabonon or whatever and should take that into account under the circumstances'

I would have even awarded him with a thank you and a karma.

He wrote something else and I justify the sarcasm that I responded with [BenHashem you have full permission to respond]

I'm sitting here and waiting (with bated breath , if I may add) for the PMs telling me how badly I screwed up the backlash.

On second thought, I can't summon the proper intentions to respond from a healthy place.
Sorry.

The popcorn was good while it lasted.

Of course, intimacy on Nittel with your wife is a lot better than P&M.

Just saying.

CAVEAT : All of the above is for normal people who struggle with a normal Yetzer Hara. However for a real addict, Dov (who is clean for over 20 years in SA) says that seeking all sorts of leniencies and enhancements in the bedroom can make a person even sicker and the shalom bayis even worse. Initially it might seem to help, but it can create a monster and become a nightmare. Instead, a real addict has no choice but to learn how to surrender lust and focus more on others, especially his wife. However, this first requires the admission that he (or she) has a real personal problem, rather than just a question about 'sexuality and halocha'. To discuss if you may have an addiction issue or not, you can reach Dov at wequithiding@gmail.com.

Parev, I really don't understand

Here on your thread, a person made a normal, sane comment that those worried about not having intimacy on Nittel should know that it's better to have intimacy than p and m. Your response was totally unprovoked, not at all in line with what was being said, ending now with a quote that it's better not to look for heterim or think about what's assur and muttar, for we are here to work, man

Yet, in another section you go and quote the opinion of one kuntres, you have no idea who he is, and but there you feel it important to let the oilam know it might not be assur, though the chances that it doesn't feed the monster are close to nil, as you will surely know.

Point is, it makes it hard for us to know if you are trying to be intellectually honest
