Almost teidelach time of year.

Teiglach, also spelled taiglach or teglach (Yiddish: ???????, singular teigel, literally "little dough") are small, knotted pastries boiled in a honeyed syrup. They are a traditional Ashkenazi Jewish treat for Rosh Hashana, Sukkot, Simchat Torah, and Purim.

a drusho on teglach:

(all in lower case so it is not too serious for this merry thread)

the word teglach sounds like teyglach, which I (oops, i meant "i") in yiddish:

daily (as in "tog-teyglach" each and every day, or daily) no?

so my shver told me teglach symbolize the heilige monn, cuz they are 'k'tzapichis bid'vash', sweet little thingybobs.

so they are a nice recovery food. they are like monn, which was the most one-day-at-a-time experience any human being ever had on the earth. collect today for today and that's it. gevalt.

may everybody have a year full of many, many sweet thingybobs that are not too fattening, and be besimcha with reb b!
