Yeah its amazing how this culture of caring developed and grew into s/t that really provides real world help to ppl. It grew from some ppl who joined a forum looking for help and caring. And today gye is fast becoming one of the most effective tools for the tzibbur to address issues that have perplexed madrichei hatzibur for a decade. I think that the secret ingredient is that mutual caring that has developed. While we are all here for our own sibrt, part of that is clearly to share w/ those that are suffering in addiction and help them suffer a little less by showing that care.

i think that post qualifies and besides, if you want to make brilliantly insightful posts you need a tweed jacket, pipe, cap and a couch. oh, and you need to know how to blow smoke rings in the air. so unless you convert the cab of yo' monstuh' truck you will need to pull over into the rest area for a quick thinking session.

ok here is a tough one. I don know exactly how to figure this out. Basically, I find that during the assur days, or during days when we are not together, I can look forward to being together with my wife in an emotional and healthy way. Once the permitted time comes, I have challenges with my own desires cropppingup... but I am working on it and improving. BUT here is a problem that i really dont know how to dal with..... Instead of being in a good mood like on an erev leil tevilla, or on som other night when we are planning to be together, I fnd that i can get more irritable. Its not to say that there are not some pressures associated with leil tevila. there are. i have to be aroud usualy to spend the time taking care of teh kids etc... while she is getting ready (a blessing that i have kids right?) and there are some other challenges. But- i dont think it is an external thing. I sense in myself some weakness.. or some issue to put it more clearly, that is setting me on edge about being together. Ifi dont control it and work erally hard, i can lose my temper and it can turn an entire 'magic' evening, into an emotional disaster.

this happened to me pretty recently, where we were planning on being together, and through acombination of things (which had been present for the last 4 weeks, i just lost myself and got upset. I told my wife i couldnt do it in that frame of mind and we held off. but it is chaval as we are on the end of the cycle and everyday is counting down to yemei issur.

I guess apart from kvetching i a wondeirng if anyone else finds tehmselves MORE prone to anger, anxiety, negativeness (or any of those yumy topics) DAVKA in the day or hours prior to being together.

thanks.

IIRC, there was a thread about this very subject, i will go see if i can find it in the meantime, is it possible that their is some subconscious expectation for the way the evening should go and there is also a certainty that it won't be as great as wished and that sets off the negativity? just wondering
