im coming home!

hi everyone! im new to this recovery thing, but im definitely likig it. i keep reading about everyone climbing to 90 and im ready to try it for myself.

ive been stuggling with the internet now for a long 12 years. im in my low 20s so i was pretty much there from the beginning of the internet problem. throughout my years in yeshiva i attempted many times to stop, all to no avail. but enough is enough, ive been made aware of the avenues for help and recovery, and i dont intend to stick around to see what happens if i wait any longer.

coming here gave me and continues to give me so much needed chizuk. a previous misconception of mine was that someone with these issues is really someone shameful with things to hide. while on the outside they may lok like regular people but on the inside, much less pretty. now that i have arrived here though, i see nothing but heroes. hiding behind the sunglasses of clever psuedonyms, the heroes save the day, one day at a time. so in a way its true its only on the outside that we look like regular people, because on the inside the truth shines bright. the gye website is our phone booth and were all crammed in together. i used to have a me against myself mentality, now its US against the world!

this is only my first post but its day 7 for me.(time flies when lifes looking better)

i welcome and incourage all comments of any sort, chizuk from everyone, the more the merrier.

The yetzer harah sure knows how to get us. One slip-up gets us all down and to make ourselves "feel better", it becomes two and then three and then more. Before we know it, we feel like we're drowning in the garbage, can't believe we could ever get out of it and throw in the towel until the next bit of inspiration strikes.

Lesson: If you fall, turn it into a positive by learning from it. How did you come to fall? How can you prevent it from happening again in the future?

And then get back up and continue being clean!
