Posted by Lizhensk - 18 Jun 2013 20:31

Hey guys, ive been on here a bit. i recently changed my name from pleasehelp9753, so if u dont

. But im not letting it get me down (even tho my wife is ) . i so far have a total of 49 days since coming

By the way, side note: ive been working on my Shmiras Einayim, but even if i look, i dont feel any lust towards those women at all. In fact, that doesnt even turn me on, its just a teivah to recognize me, thats why look. And when i act out, thats all it is: a teivah to act out, does that make sense at all? (what im saying is that i think shmiras einayim on the street isnt my problem...)

Anyway, so i fell yesterday, at day 17

I personally found that I needed a whole bunch of time as a dry drunk until I was even able to even contemplate recovery. Before that I had no perspective at all. So just stay really busy until you are ready.

Offer your wife to stay up with BBL at night, then you can be really exhausted.

I dont have to offer... she asks me to. I love it tho, I've got a cutie
I'm exhausted... gotta go to sleep

BTW, due to my time constraints, if the oilam wants the Shabbos Weekly and Tzetel Kooten to continue, i'm gonna need your submissions no later then monday night at midnight EST (That includes you Zemmy!!!)

I haven't posted on here in a while, but i was thinking of something on the way home today, so i decided to post it here.

I still am plagued by the unfairness of my situation. I am an addict and can never take my first sip of "alcohol". On top of that there are other things that seem unfair. My wife is incapable of passing certain levels in intimacy, and I have other situations that when I look at other people I cannot help but feel a twinge (ok, maybe a little more then a twinge) of jealousy.

Today I was walking home and thought of the recent events going on around where I live in Eretz Yisroel. The three kidnapped bochurim, the rockets flying at all those towns in the south (some made it here to Yerushalayim too and I know how it feels to have to run to a shelter, I can't imagine doing that 50-100 times a day). the war, the soldiers going to fight, the wounded soldiers, the soldiers who were killed nebach ?"?, and now the most recent: the missing Bochor who was found dead this afternoon.

It's pretty scary and when thinking about it, another story that i witnessed came to mind: I was a staff member in Camp Simcha for a few years. On the last night of camp, after all the campers are sleeping, there is a staff meeting by which all the staff have a chance to share their most inspiring experiences of that summer. One year, a counselor got up and asked "Why them!? why do they have to suffer all their pain? and why don't we?" and he answered by relating how 2 of his friends were driving together on their way from New York to the mountains when suddenly the car flipped over. The driver was immediately killed. The passenger walked away with barely a scratch. The counselor finished off by saying "I don't know why them, and I also don't know why 2 people sitting less then a foot away from each other in a car can have such polar opposite outcomes. But, what I DO know, and what I DID realize is that Hashem must have a chashbon".

Through the terrible recent times, we can ask "why them?" and through our terrible addiction we can ask "Why us!?". And with the most recent story again, the Bochur that survived that hike can ask the same question.

The truth is, I don't know why. And I also don't need to. Because what all this shows us is that Hashem must have a cheshbon. Chances don't happen with such polar opposites. It doesn't happen with one surviving without a scratch and the other having the most terrible outcome.

thanks,

i heard that most "why" questions, aren't really looking for a logical answer, rather they are a way of expressing frustrations.

Yes, and reminding ourselves of the lessons that Lizhensk wrote of so beautifully, is a way to alleviate those frustrations. I forget often. Thanks for the reminder!
