Dear Hashem

please excuse my language

I know that you love me more than i can imagine but why the hell does it have to hurt so freaking much please allow me to stay sane while not sleeping because baby screeches all night and therefore i can't function well anymore and fall asleep while davening learning in shiur..... oh and why the hell is my wife bleeding 4 months after the birth of our second beautiful daughter when by the first one she was clean for 6 months?

I'm not asking to understand rather just to find peace of mind to get through "today" blah blah blah...

thanx for listening i do not expect an answer but i know this is for the best.

Good job getting it out. Sometimes I find it important to spell out or speak out exactly what is bothering me.

On these forums we are given the opportunity to bare our hearts and share it all. Our comments are read by non judgmental people who have experienced similar challenges and feelings. Much of what we write here or speak to each other about we would never dream of speaking about in "the outside world". In general I have a very refined vocabulary, having been trained that that is how a yid speaks. However for my recovery I must write and talk graphically about what most would consider obscene and inappropriate. Feel free to write more. Its for your own good. Wishing you the best thanks for the post however i happen to disagree about talking graphically (once posted this on a different forum) while true that we must talk more openly than others however the issur of nivul peh still exists even for us so totally letting loose IMHO is not the way to go so as much as i want to blast everything (and probably lose a few friends) i can't so whatever slips out that's it
