Amen

encouraging and thoughtful that i know i can do this for good !

I am only holding where I am because I have been trying to understand what people here have been telling me.

Unfortunately "letting go" does not work for me and I do not want to elaborate on this right now

Regardless if it is a Confession or an Admission, Mayan Hamisgaber I wish You success in your new Kabbalah, and may you always be pure and clean.

It is time to stop to be Medakdek on others terminology, Lets leave the Lomdos and the Dikdukim for the Beis Medrosh.

What works for me when i am stressed, is that i bring Hashem in the stress, and i do my chores according to Hashem priorities. What would hashem wants me to do first, and another tool i use, is that i "Let God, Let go". I cannot control my outcomes, and i am not trying o control other,s i am only striving to be the best that Hashem intended me to be.

Actually, terminology and wordin' is extremely important, especially when it is definin' someone's mindset.

I have a confession to make

There is a certain site that gets thru my filter that I can watch trailers of movies nothing xxx but enough that I know it makes my struggle so much harder.

I hereby commit to not going on to that site for the next month bl'n.

I need to do this now as stress is most likely to happen just before a major move and I need to help myself as much as I can. And yes I will call someone from my contacts when I need to vent or cry or whatever.

I think I have the same hole in my filter- and I love movie trailers. I stopped going there Because it makes things too difficult. However, you should know that if we share the same floor there is a way to lock it down also although I haven't found it necessary to do that Confessin' one's sins is a type of absolvment. Forgive me father and be done with it. Open the curtain, knock on the glass window, recite, "I shpritzed," draw the curtain, exit, drive to the corner and pick up a partner for an hour.

Pheh! Accomplishes nothin'.

Admittin' one's defects - especially to others is powerful. We are now not tortured by loneliness; we do belong. By bein' honest, we obtain humility. It brings about the willingness to take advice and accept direction from others. We will no longer be self-deceived and delusional.

Oh, and by the way, read the white book.

ICordnoy don't!

They say that these gloves are textin' gloves, but like most of my life, that's baloney.

And by the way, every time I type the letter l at the beginnin' of a post, it immediately types Cordnoy, and need to delete it. Well, I'm not in the mood.

Well I already did not stick to my commitment so I am considering it a fall because I need to train myself to be careful even from the small things that lead me to really act out.

Yes agree terminology is big because it reflects and shapes attitude.
