

Journey of one day at a time

Posted by Ihavenostrength - 10 Feb 2017 20:04

This is day one or perhaps it's day zero. I fell today. It wasn't much fun. I was clean for 32 days. That is about how long I usually go for. I really want to be done with this problem. I just want to be normal. My self esteem is crushed every time I fall. Somehow internal adversity is more painful than an external adversary. For if it's an external adversary, even if he's causing you pain, you don't take the blame for it. Only the pain. With the internal losses you get both. I suppose I'm my own worst enemy. Well I hope that was morbid enough for you, because I'd like to begin my journey.

so many things to say...

1. I think PG movies are very inappropriate. PG stands for parental guidance. Conventionally, this could mean that parents need to watch these movies with their children to explain more difficult ideas. Personally, I think the parents themselves need guidance to have let their children watch this junk in the first place.
 2. Would you go to Russia if someone were there wanting to kill you? (PS: it's a little bigger than Italy, perhaps a little more litvish too) :-)
 3. Never wanting to do it again... it sounds very dramatic. The addict's best tool is drama. Thunder and lightning in the background, tense violin processes as you audaciously click that forbidden link. The fate of the world rests in your hands. The dance for eternity. Do you pull out? Perhaps the Devil has sunken his teeth in too deeply, for now... ...
ie just try live today. Who cares about tomorrow?

Day 40: Very grateful to have reached forty days of sobriety. It's? a significant step up (albeit a small one) from my usual run.

ODAAT. So important. Not sober for one day. Living for one day. As you get sober for longer it's tempting to think of being sober as a goal in itself. (In the beginning, being sober for a week or so ain't much of an accomplishment, so it's less tempting).

It ain't a goal in itself. It's about making room for life. Too make room for yourself.

@singularity

There definitely is alot of junk out there, but there are some movies that don't have such terrible messages aren't there? Not to say that there aren't better ways to use one's time... But you gotta know yourself right?

I don't understand the Russia analogy, would you clarify for me please?

Thanks for giving me the kick in the pants I needed. (I suppose I was being dramatic).

Perhaps when you have a dark past it's tempting to want to counter it with imagining a bright future.

Today, or just one day, no matter how well lived, doesn't seem to be enough. Obviously though you are correct, one day at a time adds up to many days well lived.

Peace

32 days shows the insane strength that your Yetzer Tov has. Use the guilt to do sincere Tshuva, and remember the guilt every time you have an urge. Hashem is with you and extremely proud of you!

Speaking of steak and sushi, I think we should make a plan to go out and get some some day soon.

I am joining... I might even treat us to a bottle of wine,

Meanwhile I am so getting a steak tonight.
