Every time you fall and get up it's a win! The longer you fight the battle, the more experience you get and the more clear it becomes to you what you want at the end. So I think that even though the falls may be a little worse, it may be just that the test is harder cuz the yh knows that you have so much more to gain now that you're so far ahead of where you were in the past, when you were falling more often and not fighting the same way you are now. You're doin great keep goin strong!!

I was just recently making a cheshbon if I'm winning or losing this battle by thinking about where I was holding last year. now the question is like this, I don't fall as often but some of my recent falls were much worse in terms of what I did when I fell curious if anyone had any insights on this?

i'd leave it to others to let you know how the heavenly angels are clapping and cheering and jumping for joy everytime you hold back, and i might even believe that, so that's good, but (sorry), if these behaviors and your thoughts and your life are still preoccupied with this stuff - that means you need to do something more to stem the tide - a real step. [when brady or mahomes or montana or rodgers (may he be damned!) are down 19-7 at the half, but they have a pretty good idea how to exploit the other team's holes and deficiencies and they plan accordingly, are they winning or losing at the half? (wow! i like that mashal.)] practicing with pads at the linkbelt oval stadium in aiwo, nauru; sadly, the surface is phosphate dust and dirt, not grass, but thank god, for today at least, the practice squad is split evenly between the genders, so i'm staying close to the opposition - like glue (hopefully super glue).

I wish I could put the pain to words, maybe a poem about it but I guess my pain is just going to be as is. I screwed up, I kept a phone that I could have put on service whenever I wanted, and it was an unlocked phone. It started a pretty simple, a stupid TV show even though I know that the emotions in it will hurt me. Well yes, it caused me to fall. I feel like my life's a mess and I can't deal with it. However, I look up and realize that there is a reason for everything I'm going through, this whole fight is just to bring glory to the one and only.

Well truth be told my falls now aren't as big as they once were, and are much more spread apart.

So please help me God that it should have a happy conclusion, an ending that I will be proud of, an ending that I can say, "this was where I got to, with my blood, sweat, and tears".

I want a life of true love not of romance. The life of work, a life of sweat, a life of glorifying your name.

I am taking this fight to The Bitter End because that is what I am here for. It is so simple yet so complicated. I feel so spent but in this tiredness is my strength, cuz' my strength is by sticking to my guns even when I'm down, and to keep fighting.

So long,

Farmer k.

I can so relate to the years that I had felt that way.

Trouble, I have no idea who that Montana Mondays or whatever you were talking about is, but I think you have a mighty good point about doing something different, a real step to 'stem the tide"...

Do you mean that you watched something worse, or that you did it in some more pleasurable way, or that you just did it many more times in one day or in a span of a few days?

Aside from that check out the Microsoft family safety if your phone is an android and/or if you have a computer that runs on windows, it's a free accountability service and it's also a good optional filter system. Both services it offers are really good and I think it'll help you a lot.
